Stainless Steel Barbeque Plates and Grills

for a brighter appearance clean after each use

Lifestyle barbeque plates and grills are manufactured from stainless steel for exceptionally long life. They do not rust and are easy to keep clean. They are a more hygienic and healthier alternative to cast-iron plates and grills. With frequent use it is normal for the surface of the plate or grill to blacken over time due to combustion of cooking oils. The heat transfer efficiency of the plate or grill will not be affected. For a cleaner appearance, cleaning after each use to minimize the accumulation of carbon. However the proportion of area that retains the luster of the original surfaces will depend on the individual's enthusiasm for the cleaning task.

Instructions

- Wash the plate or grill before first use
- Coat with film of cooking oil before applying heat
- Clean food particles and deposits from the grill after each use
- Plates and grills can be treated with caustic aerosol oven cleaners for 4-24 hours prior to cleaning with new scotch-brite pads. Stainless steel steel-wool can be used with hot water and detergent. Avoid using mild steel-wool or soap pads as abraded particles may cause rust-staining
- Avoid pouring cold water on a hot grill or plate
